In other words: a monster outbreak of bed bugs. The pest has moved north from southern U.S. states where it was never a problem. In Texas, the Texas Department of Agriculture and the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality are working to control the bed bug invasion. Researchers are trying to determine how bed bugs are able to spread so rapidly. But the answers could be deadly for people who live in cities, because of the risk of a vicious infestation. More than 300 Texas cities have reported bed bug problems, according to the Texas Department of Agriculture. The unarmed citizens were just on their way home to Arita town, an island just east of Naha, Okinawa. Two unarmed U.S. military officers were on patrol when they stopped the two citizens. The Marine who fired first said he was defending himself, as the unarmed citizens tried to run away. The second shooter, a lieutenant, said he was being held at gunpoint and fired in self-defense. Neither case is likely to be proved. While the government has clearly established that the victims were unarmed, the incident was still an atrocity, in that the Marine was killed, and the two civilians were shot in the head, allegedly by the Japanese police. The U.S. Marines have not been identified as being involved, so there is no accountability for their actions. The government has dropped the ball so far on this case. Instead of pressing for the dismissal of the officer who shot the victims in the head, the government is pursuing a convoluted, sensationalistic trial of the second shooter, Lt. Andrew Aranda. A judge has refused to release him from the military prison where he is being held. The victim's families and the residents of Arita are already deeply dissatisfied with the slow, ineffectual responses of the government. The families are demanding that the government conduct a thorough investigation and determine the identity of the responsible parties and prosecute them to the fullest extent of the law. The residents of Arita are demanding that their local government provide safe access to the beaches of Arita and take legal action against

Hi, my name is David Lagani, and I'm one of the Visualization and Modeling product managers here at Autodesk. We're going to be talking about some of the major features of AutoCAD for you. (video: 1:06 min.) [1:06] The first thing I'd like to discuss with you today is how you can use AutoCAD with the HoloLens. With AutoCAD, we've always seen it through the lens of drawing. And what you're seeing on your screen is really a 3D model. But we've started to wonder what else you could do with a drawing in the future. So that's the goal of our technology, which is really the ability to bring a 3D model to life. To do this, we're using the HoloLens. You're probably familiar with HoloLens. It's a new augmented reality computing platform that lets you see the world in 3D. It's not quite there yet, but we've put together a bunch of different apps to bring your models to life. So I'd like to tell you a little bit about HoloLens and show you a couple of examples. [1:26] A couple of examples of HoloLens apps are HoloLens Design Studio, a drawing app that lets you create a 3D model of a room. And you can move your model around to see what it looks like in 3D.
